Tanya L. Saunders, "Flaming Souls: Homosexuality, Homophobia, and Social Change in Barbados by David A. B. Murray Sexual Revolutions in Cuba: Passion, Politics, and Memory by Carrie Hamilton," Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society 39, no. 3 (Spring ): Homosexuality was being discussed in a variety of Barbadian media sites ranging from newspapers to the Internet and radio. During my longest visit, from September to April , I cut out and filed every news item from the Nation (one of Barbados's two daily newspapers) that included the word homosexual or gay. By the end of that seven-month period my file folder had . Derived from 6 years of ethnographic field work in Barbados, and illuminated by Murrays more than 30 years of research there, Flaming Souls offers a textually and methodologically diverse reading of Barbadian homosexuality and Barbadian homophobia, asking what it means to label the Caribbean a global problem area for gay rights and, more broadly, whether it is problematic to .
